Are you building or busting your players' self-confidence? Good coaches consistently build self-confidence in their players. They continually look for opportunities in practice and competition where they can help their athletes grow, improve and feel better about themselves. They have an innate understanding that athletes always perform in direct relation to their level of confidence. Knock your players down in the wrong way and at the wrong time and you will be "rewarded" with consistent performance problems and underachievement. Build your players up honestly and appropriately, and they will consistently over-achieve for you.

21. 다음 글의 요지로 가장 적절한 것은?

Some have suggested that blood sugar, which brain cells use as their main energy source and cannot do without for even a few minutes, has an impact upon our willpower. Most cognitive functions are unaffected by minor blood sugar fluctuations over the course of a day, but willpower strength is sensitive to such small changes. Exerting willpower lowers blood sugar, which reduces the capacity for further self-control. Research shows that people who drink a glass of lemonade between completing tasks that required self-control performed equally well on both tasks. However, drinking sugarless diet lemonade was not as effective. Dieting essentially involves restricting one's caloric intake and produces lower glucose, which undermines the willpower needed to prevent you from eating.
